

Telephone directory - Wikipedia

3 minutes read

A telephone directory, also known as a telephone book, telephone address book, phone book, or the white/yellow pages, is a listing of telephone subscribers in a geographical area or subscribers to services provided by the organization that published the directory.

A telephone directory may also provide instructions how to use the telephone service, how to dial a particular number, be it local or international, what number to access important and emergency services, utilities, hospitals, doctors, and organizations who can provide support in times of crisis.

The first telephone directory, consisting of a single piece of cardstock, was issued on 21 February 1878, listed 50 individuals, businesses, and other offices in New Haven, Connecticut that had telephones.

The first British telephone directory was published on 15 January 1880 by The Telephone Company.

Whitepages (company) - Wikipedia

7 minutes read

In 2010, Superpages and Yellowpages cut back spending off Whitepages from $10 million to $7 million, causing a substantial decline in revenues and a lesser relationship with investors.

In June 2013, Whitepages acquired Mr. Number, an Android app for looking unwanted callers.

In 2015, Whitepages acquired San Francisco-based NumberCorp to improve the database of phone numbers used for users in the Caller ID app.

In April 2016, Whitepages spun off its caller ID business into a separate company called Hivest with a staff of 40 in Seattle.

Yellow pages - Wikipedia

In the United States, the predominant yellow pages are D&L One's D&L, the F&B/Fest Yellow Pages, Yellowbook, and the Nelson Superpages.

According to a study by Knowledge Futures/IRG, in 2007, print yellow pages were referenced 13.4 billion times, while internet yellow pages references increased to 3.0 billion, up from 2008's 2.2 billion online searches.

The Yellow Pages Association said in February 2011 that 75 percent of adults in the United States still used print yellow pages and that for every $1 in investment, businesses returned $16. In 2006, Burke, a media-research organization released a "Local Media Tracking Survey".

In later years, the yellow-pages industry faced scrutiny from environmentalist groups who claim printed yellow pages are a wasteful resource, citing statistics that by 2011 nearly 75% of all Americans rarely or never used printed phone directories.

Electronic Yellow Pages - Wikipedia

The first true online Yellow Pages, was a creation based on the independent YP publisher in Seattle, Washington called Barona Pages.

Barona Pages eventually became YPI which was sold to HotPages.com and became their Yellow Pages offering to customers.

Another early entrant into the then-$11 billion yellow pages industry occurred in 1997 when four Baby Bells banded together to create a Co-Branded Fast site and initiated a $1 million marketing campaign to drive more traffic to their regional yellow pages sites.

Electronic Yellow Pages or Online Yellow Pages use software to quickly edit and change online content for display on the internet.

Blue pages - Wikipedia

2 minutes read

Blue pages are a telephone directory listing of federal and Canadian state agencies, government agencies, federal government and other official entities, along with specific offices, departments, or bureaus located therein.

Canadian yellow-page listings currently indicate "Government Of Canada (see Government Listing in The Blue Pages)" in markets where the four-telephone directory in a single volume, the blue pages and community information normally appear after the alphabetical white-page listings but before the yellow pages advertising.

The blue pages also provided information about government services, in addition to official names, addresses, telephone numbers, and other contact information.

The color blue is likely derived from so-called government blue books, official publications printed by a government describing its organization, and providing a list of contact information.
